

Alaska Monthly Fire Potential Outlook

- Forecast:

- November fire potential is expected to be normal statewide. The December through February fire potential is expected to be normal as well. Alaska is out of fire season.

- Factors:

- Alaska is out of fire season; the ground is generally snow covered and will remain so for the winter.
- Above normal temperatures are forecast in November over the northern third of the state. Greater than normal precipitation is expected for the north slope and northwest Alaska.
- The December-February time period is expected to continue to have warmer than normal temperatures over the northern third of the state with no indication for above or below normal precipitation.